Food for thought

Wellington fashion streetwear label The Hinitiative and Wellington City Mission have launched a T-shirt design competition open to college students in the Wellington region. The top four designs will be sold by selected stores to raise money for the Wellington City Mission and will also be modelled during the Walk on Earth fashion show to be held in the capital in September. The theme, "Food for Thought", is open to interpretation. Designs may relate directly to food, to the Wellington City Mission's foodbank, to the feelings one has when well-fed, or even to what the mission strives to achieve in the community. Entries will be judged by Wellington designer Robyn Mathieson, clothing stores Fusion Surf & Skate and Rex Royale, and design company The Church. An entry form can be downloaded from www.thehinitiative.co.nz. The competition closes on August 11.
